As the constable was about to remove the beans from the barn, plaintiff in error told him the beans were his and did not belong to Charles, and he bade the constable not to levy on them or remove them. The constable said he would remove them, and attempted to do so, when plaintiff in error put his hands upon the officer and excluded him from the barn, using only so much force as was necessary to prevent the removal. The evidence would have justified the jury in finding the exclusive ownership and possession of the beans to be in the plaintiff in error.
