The blood loses a portion of its elements, and not only is bile secreted but a kind of animal sugar is formed in the substance of the liver. These, with other changes, appear to be necessary to e.--Stomach. f.--The spleen, h, 1--The colon. PRACTICAL REVIEW. 205 the maintenance of health, and when disorders of the liver prevent their perfect performance, the entire system suffers. 319. Excretions from the Blood.--As the blood circulates it not only supplies the glands with the materials which compose their various secretions, but it delivers to the excretory organs such matters as are of no value to the system and must be expelled from it. A very large portion of this waste is carried to the lungs and by them expelled during the process of breathing; but no inconsiderable part is excreted through the medium of the kidneys and of the glands of the skin. Of these various processes more will be said in a later chapter ( 358). 320. Practical Review.--What is generally understood by the circulatory system? In what respects does the systemic circulation differ from the pulmonic? Of which of these is the portal circulation a branch? Explain how exercise taken regularly and moderately may strengthen the heart s action and improve one s general health. Explain how alcohol, by causing a shrinkage of the red blood corpuscles, may retard the...
