On an old borrowed map hidden under her bed, Francine had scribbled in bright blue crayon "the other side of the world." Born with an exceptional curiosity in a small town jam-packed with well-preserved century-old mysteries, where indiscretions lined cellars and attics like jars of last years apricots, 17-year old Francine found no lie was so well constructed, no secret so well kept, no treasure so deeply buried that she could not discover it. So when an unexpected opportunity to go away for the summer came along, her neighbors were relieved to see her go. The question on everyone's mind was "Would she return?" "Whatever the unknown in Europe," she told her parents at supper, "it has to be better than the known in a small town, where truth is hidden behind smiles, pleasantries, and an over abundance of stretch lace at weddings. Whatever the truth is about my own life, it's waiting..."
