Excerpt from The Agricultural Depression, and Some Practical Measures That Would Help the British Farmer: A Lecture I do wish to impress this fact upon the minds of all who may hear, or read this discussion, that in the districts of England affected by the drought of last summer a crisis has been reached such as has not been known in the lifetime of the present generation. This can only be met now by landlords and tenants pulling together. I would urge upon all landlords and agents, for the sake of all that is merciful and just, for their own sake and for that of our common country, if they have an honest and industrious tenant, to stick to him, help him, and if it can be avoided, don't take his capital in the form of rent. Remember, if the present race of farmers be ruined, men equally good will not be found. I would say to all tenants, If you have a good landlord, who meets you as far as he can, stick to him,...
